Resource Needs Assessment

Why was this project or program important?

The District will be able to use this information in Local Work Group meetings to develop long range plans and target funds for their most important resource needs.

Project: What problem was occurring? Who did it impact? Why did your conservation/education district get involved? Program: What needs were identified in the community that weren't being met. Why did your conservation/education district get involved?

Project or program summary

Resource Needs Assessments (RNA) are a comprehensive analysis of the work needed to be done to achieve natural resource conservation goals set by a Conservation District. NRCDs work with partners and stakeholders to develop or update resource assessments that address local conservation priorities and the need of their cooperators for conserving soil, water, and related resources within their District. The assessment is based on input from cooperators, interested stakeholders, and partners using science-based information. The purpose of an RNA is to ensure that conservation efforts address the most important local resource needs.

Project: How did your project uniquely meet natural resource and land use needs? What were your objectives? Did you meet them? Program: Identify the specific education efforts that were the focus of the program. What were your objectives? Did you meet them?

Share a Quote or Testimonial

Please share a quote from a landowner or stakeholder who have worked with your District or Education Center

The recent catastrophic fires in the district and ongoing drought highlight the need for the district to do an extensive investigation of our cooperators' natural resource needs and priorities so we don't waste precious financial resources chasing the wrong priorities.
